- A Former officers' mess, now included in the billeting area. The building had an octangular wooden tower on the roof which had glass windows and a rod antenna. The tower was occupied all the time.
- Aa Six antenna masts flying black triangular flags on top. They are grouped around a building with a flat roof, from which a low tower rises. Three smaller antenna masts, also flying black triangular flags, were located about 200 meters to the south, between the buildings of a former sanatorium. Only a few soldiers were seen in this section and section A above.
- B U-shaped four-story barracks building, of which only a few rooms were occupied. Most of the rooms seemed to be office rooms, since wall posters and file cabinets were observed in them. The roof of the central section had an antenna and a canvas-covered device on it. The gate next to this building was used primarily by officers, chiefly captains and senior lieutenants. This gate was used by vehicles with
- C U-shaped four-story barracks building, apparently also an office building. More personnel were observed in this building than in building B.
- D Garages, in which only passenger cars were seen.
- E Truck garages and repair shops.
- F Four barracks buildings around a yard. These buildings were more heavily occupied by troops than other sections of the installation. The troops occupying this area were without branch-of-service insignia.
- G Two three-story brick buildings, apparently storehouses.
- H Old boiler house, not used.
- I Kitchen.
- K Boiler house.
- L Soviet commissary and houses occupied by Soviet officer families.
- M House with an octangular wooden tower. Only a few soldiers were seen in the house and none on the tower.
- N Boundary line between the billeting area of the Luftnachrichten Schule and that of the former Heeresnachrichten Schule.
